

the price of his own: the person embraces him again. The officer, moved to compassion at this affecting sight, advances and says to the old man: "Comfort yourself, I will not take your son from you, I will share the merit of this worthy deed: he is free as well as you, and I regret not, in the least, a sum of which he had made so noble an use, there is his discharge." The father and son threw themselves at his feet: the last declines accepting his proffered liberty, and conjures the captain to permit him to join the regiment; saying, he should only be burthensome to his father, who had no further need of him: The officer cannot refuse his request.

The youth served the usual time; always saved something from his pay, which he constantly remitted to his father; and when he got his discharge, returned home, and has ever since maintained the old man by his industry.

CARLOS AND ANTONIO AN AFFECTING TA

CARLOS and Antonio were sons of Don Manuel Luzina; ty of their persons were only exce amiab accomplisments of their sincere wish to promote the happiness of their earliest infancy. In them the of their parents was solely centered their peace was equally dear: but uncertain, how slight the foundation of earthly joys! They who never
